Hidden Heritage Finale!

*****

The Community Development Trust's Hidden Heritage Project celebrated its achievements with a weekend of talks, displays, walks and activities on May 10th and 11th. The project involved volunteers in investigating the heritage of the landscape between Arrochar and Tarbet using a range of archaeological techniques, under the professional supervision of Northlight Heritage.

The project hosted a 1-day conference on Saturday May 10th, attended by about 70 people, including many of the volunteers who had participated in different aspects of the project. A brilliant selection of talks during the day included summaries of the project's findings by archaeologists from Northlight Heritage, a discussion about the importance of community archaeology by Noel Fojut (currently Head of Policy and Legislation at Historic Scotland), revelations about a rare Viking cemetery at Arden by Dr. Colleen Batey (Glasgow University), an introduction to the fascinating field of flint-tool research by Dr. Dene Wright (Glasgow University), thoughts on the importance of engaging schools in heritage projects ( Brian Wilkinson), and different perspectives on the role of heritage in sustaining communities by Sir Malcolm Colquhoun (Luss Estates) and Gordon Watson (National Park). However, highlights of the day included talks by two of the project's volunteers - Biff Carmichael, who together with three other volunteers, researched and produced a booklet on 'The Gaelic Place Names of Arrochar Parish', and Katherine Price, who enjoyed the archaeology so much that she has since registered to do an Archaeology degree at Glasgow University! Last, and by no means least, P6/7

Some of the 'treasure trove' of old coins and jewellery on display during the Conference pupils Charlie, Coral and Crystal, backed up by P1 teacher Kerry Boyd, fittingly stole the show by introducing an interactive power point presentation that they had helped to create, allowing people to explore some of the local heritage sites. On Sunday, volunteers led guided walks from the Three Villages Hall to Tarbet along part of the new heritage trail to explain the history behind some of the features in the landscape – from ancient trees, to vestiges of the curling pond, to the remains of settlements. The walks ended up at Tarbet where volunteers provided demonstrations of dry stone walling (The West of Scotland Dry Stone Walling Association), flint knapping, heating water with stones, Iron-age style (!), dying cloth with woad, and excitingly, dragging a traditionally-made boat across land, to see how the Vikings might have managed!

Just like the old days! Modern Vikings show how a traditionally-made boat could be dragged across land from Loch to Loch.

If anyone would like any more information on the Hidden Heritage Project, visit the website at : <http://www.hiddenheritage.org.uk/> or email: info@hiddenheritage.org.uk. The project has produced leaflets to accompany the heritage trail and a guide to Viking sites around the Clyde, as well as a photography book to celebrate the landscape and the community's involvement in the project, a book on 'The Gaelic Place Names of Arrochar Parish', a tea towel and posters, which are all freely available. If you'd like copies of any of these, just let us know at the above email address. The project was funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund and Argyll and the Islands LEADER, and supported by Luss Estates.
